The Aronimink Golf Club course was designed by Donald Ross in 1928 who designed more than 400 courses, including famed venues: Pinehurst #2, Seminole Golf Club and Oakland Hills. Organized in 1896, Aronimink was named after an Indian Chief of the Lenape Tribe (Aronomink). Ross’ original design was to incorporate a parkland setting with more than 100 bunkers, slopes, valleys and doglegs in an effort to require superior shot making. Recently, Aronimink has undergone a restoration and renovation project guided by architect Ron Prichard in an effort to restore all bunkers to their original design, add an additional five acres of fairways (up to 31 acres) and restore the pond in front of the 10th green.

The most celebrated event held at Aronimink was the 1962 PGA Championship won by Gary Player. The native South African finished the event at 2-under-par (278), defeating Bob Goalby by one shot. With the win, Player became the fifth foreign-born player to win the PGA Championship.
